EPA Releases Fluoride Preliminary Assessment Plan and Literature Survey

On January 22, 2026, the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) released its “Review of Science on Fluoride in Drinking Water: Preliminary Assessment Plan and Literature Survey,” the next step in the agency developing a new, comprehensive health assessment of fluoride in drinking water. The plan describes the key science issues EPA will consider, including sensitive populations such as infants and children, and compiles a literature survey of relevant health effects studies to be evaluated in the assessment. EPA used artificial intelligence and other automated tools to prioritize the studies most likely to be relevant to the toxicity assessment. EPA will focus on the potential harmful health effects of fluoride exposure and will not consider beneficial effects such as dental caries prevention. The plan was published in the Federal Register on January 28, 2026, triggering a 30-day public comment period.

Previously, on September 24, 2024, a federal judge in the Northern District of California found in Food & Water Watch, Inc., et al. v. EPA that “fluoridation of water at 0.7 milligrams per liter (mg/L) – the level presently considered ‘optimal’ in the United States – poses an unreasonable risk of reduced IQ in children.” The judge cautioned, however, that “this finding does not conclude with certainty that fluoridated water is injurious to public health; rather, as required by . . . TSCA [the federal Toxic Substances Control Act], the Court finds there is an unreasonable risk of such injury, a risk sufficient to require the EPA to engage with a regulatory response” (emphasis in original). EPA has appealed this decision to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit, and oral argument is scheduled for March 3, 2026.

EPA explained in a press release that, rather than conduct a fluoride risk evaluation under TSCA, the agency determined that a review under the Safe Drinking Water Act (SDWA), led by EPA’s Office of Water, is the most appropriate regulatory pathway for addressing fluoride as a drinking water contaminant. According to EPA, “This decision reflects SDWA’s specific statutory framework for protecting public health from contaminants in drinking water systems.” Pursuant to the SDWA, EPA previously set in 1986 the maximum contaminant level (MCL) for fluoride at 4.0 milligrams per liter (mg/L), a standard designed to prevent known or anticipated adverse health effects, and most recently reviewed that MCL in 2024. Under normal SDWA timelines, EPA’s next comprehensive analysis of new scientific information on potential health risks of fluoride in drinking water would not be due until 2030, but EPA is accelerating its review.

EPA’s responsibility under the SDWA is to ensure that overall fluoride levels in drinking water remain within health-protective limits, but the agency does not make policy recommendations to state or local systems whether to add fluoride to drinking water. Instead, decisions whether to add fluoride to drinking water are guided by public health recommendations from the Department of Health and Human Services (DHHS) and the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) and have ultimately been made at the state or local level. The DHHS announced in April 2025 that it is reconvening a task force to make a new recommendation on fluoridation of drinking water.

Metropolitan staff will continue to monitor EPA’s regulation of fluoride in drinking water, the Food & Water Watch lawsuit, and DHHS’ recommendation on community water fluoridation. (See General Counsel’s July 2025 Board Report.).
